Guests can experiment with colored tape to create giant geometric patterns along the sidewalks and collaborate to create and share comics, masks and banners. For the fourth year in a row, Grand Park will partner with Self-Help Graphics & Art to present a traditional Noche de Ofrenda ceremony honoring the dead and featuring prayer led by the local indigenous community. In addition to enjoying performances by traditional dancers representing the Aztecan, Oaxacan and Michoacán traditions, as well as Los Angeles-based poets and musicians, the event will unveil a master altar created by master altar maker Ofelia Esparaza. The event kicks off the official unveiling of Grand Park's Día de los Muertos altars and art installations developed by local artists and community groups.

Grand Park Día de los Muertos Altars

October 30, 2016 – November 5, 2016

Grand Park celebrates the traditions of Día de los Muertos with multiple ways to experience and learn about the holiday. In partnership with Self-Help Graphics & Art, the park will present 35 altars and art installations created by local artists and community groups in honor of Día de los Muertos. The altars, which will remain in the park all week long, will focus on themes that impact local communities. Altar subjects range from personal stories that celebrate families and lost loved ones, to more contemporary expressions of current affairs and community challenges, such as gang violence, immigration reform and education.

The park will also honor Oaxacan Día de los Muertos traditions by paying special tribute to Los Angeles' Oaxacan community. Much of the now highly recognizable celebratory elements of the holiday are rooted in the Oaxacan approach, specifically the creation of altars and sugar skulls. The park will also feature various floral- and color-themed Altar-Ofrendas celebrating the traditional city plaza installations closely associated with Oaxacan customs surrounding the holiday.

The park will offer free lunchtime tours, which will highlight the artwork and discuss the traditions of the holiday.

The exhibit is organized by the CCF as the culmination event of its year-long centennial celebration.
